The Causeway Coast and Glens Heritage Trust promotes awareness of the natural and cultural heritage of three Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty: the Antrim Coast and Glens, the Causeway Coast and Binevenagh.

This exhibition explores the links between the natural landscape of Binevenagh AONB and how people have used and thought about this landscape.

The names people give to places are revealing. A name may show what a place has been like in the past, what has happened there, who has owned it, or what it has meant to people living there. Many place names are recorded in historical documents and maps, and most of these are still in everyday use.

However, some place names are not written down, and may be lost if the people using them do not pass them on. Losing these names means losing part of our history, identity and sense of place.

Binevenagh Townlands and Fieldnames

This exhibition explores the links between the natural landscape of Binevenagh AONB and how people have used and thought about this landscape.

The names people give to places are revealing. A name may show what a place has been like in the past, what has happened there, who has owned it, or what it has meant to people living there. Many place names are recorded in historical documents and maps, and most of these are still in everyday use.

However, some place names are not written down, and may be lost if the people using them do not pass them on. Losing these names means losing part of our history, identity and sense of place.